

Latest News on New Regulations for the Energy Internet

Overview

The 'connections end to end' review update, published today proposes stronger licence requirements, financial penalties and tougher enforcement to end unacceptable delays developers are experiencing at every stage of the connections process. The new amendment to the Energy Industry Act (EnWG) is intended to respond to European and national changes in energy policy. It combines climate protection, security of supply and economic competitiveness. The reasons for this are new EU requirements and the experiences from the energy crisis. It is “the policy of the United States to sustain and enhance America's global AI dominance,” a deputy assistant attorney general at the Department of Justice wrote in a court notice suggesting it might intervene. The Environmental Defense Fund cited $1. 4 billion in canceled renewable energy.
